A Perspective on the Evidence Regarding Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus Surveillance.

This article by HW USA tells part of the story behind the USA not setting standards for MRSA Surveillance.

"The publication in prominent journals of 2 studies, the STAR*ICU Study and the MRSA-Swiss Study, seems to have had a disproportionate impact on health-care policy, which has stymied the widespread adoption of MRSA active surveillance testing in hospitals." -- Journal of Patient Safety, Aug. 2012.

The Rate of MRSA Infections has Doubled in Five Years

- MRSA is becoming more resistant to other antibiotics.
- One in 20 inpatients either have or carry the bacteria, and the true incidence may be higher.
- The incidence of MRSA Infections were found to have doubled between 2003 and 2008.

Nurse Burnout Linked to Increase in Healthcare Associated Infections.

For each additional patient above 5.7 that a nurse was responsible for, there was an increase in the rate of Catheter-Associated Urinary Tract Infections (CAUTI) by one per every 1000 patients and Surgical Site Infections (SSI) by 5 per every 1000 patients.

"Researchers estimated that if nursing burnout rates were reduced to 10%, Pennsylvania hospitals could prevent an estimated 4,160 infections and save $41 million annually."
